

A culture of collaboration: Lessons from hardwired humans

<http://www.tamarackcommunity.ca/library/a-culture-of-collaboration-lessons-from-hardwired-humans>

Content: In his book, Hardwired Humans – Successful Leadership using Human Instincts, author Andrew O’Keeffe provides a practical framework and tools for engaging with others. This framework can be instrumental in creating a culture of collaboration in community change efforts including collective impact. This conversation between Andrew and Tamarack’s Lisa Attygalle focused on three of nine of the Hardwired Human instincts including: social belonging, first impressions to classify, and loss aversion. Listen in to better understand the origins of these human behaviours and how they can be used to advance collaborative efforts.

Presenting Organisation: Tamarack Institute

Tamarack Institute was created to understand community change and help organisations and citizens work better together for a collective impact. A learning centre has been established to provide research and document real stories, exemplary practice and effective applications for community change. The Institute also applies what is learnt to end poverty.

Presenter/s: Andrew O’Keeffe
Lisa Attygalle, Tamarack Institute